

Purpose - What am I writing this for?

A character description helps you to imagine what a character is like. It tells you what the character looks like and how they behave.

Content - What do I include in my writing?

Success Criteria	Have I included it?
Have I given a description of personality?
Have I given a description of appearance?
Have I given a description of unique features?
Have I included figurative language?
Have I included expanded noun phrases?
Have I included fronted adverbials?

sn

Language

Character Description Word Mat

Face	Hair	Body	Voice	Clothes	Movement
adorable	afro	angular	booming	clean	blundering
attractive	braided	athletic	brittle	damaged	edging
beautiful	narrow	broad	clear	fashionable	hobbling
black	olive	bulky	confident	flowing	limping
blotchy	odd	burly	croaking	ill-fitting	looming
blushing	plump	crimped	wild	modern	pacing
brown	crumpled	curly	wispy	neat	plodding
cheerful	dark	fine		old-fashioned	racing
cruel	scrunched	floppy		pristine	scrambling
cute	slim	frizzy		spotless	skulking
freckled	striking	ginger		stylish	stalking
gloomy	stunning	golden		tidy	stooping
gorgeous	sullen	greasy		torn	striding
jaunty	sunburnt	luscious		untidy	strutting
kind	sunken	messy		unkempt	stumbling
long	unusual	neat		vintage	sweeping
loving	wicked	ringlets		worn	trudging
miserable	wrinkled	shiny

Structure -

How do I set my writing out?

Hades

On the grassy regal throne of the Underworld, next to his three-headed pet dog Cerberus, Hades would more than likely be found. Following the triumph of him and his brothers, he became Lord of the Underworld. He was feared by mortals and disliked by the other Olympians. This was one of the reasons he rarely left his dark abode in the Underworld. The activity he enjoyed deeply was observing guilty mortals being tortured. Besides this, Hades generally was most happy when in solitude. Nothing got Hades blood bubbling more than the din created by mortals - the noise often made Hades lose his temper. He was known to be formidable in battle but surprising to some he was not an evil God. Sure, he was unyielding, fierce and relentless. But he was also just. He took pride in abiding by the rules. There were even rumours that the God of Death could show kindness and generosity on the rare occasion. Unlike most other Gods, he was hardworking and took his duties seriously.

Most people didn't know the reason Hades was so morbid. They didn't know about his past and how his father had treated him and his siblings. Hades dwelled on his past which made him bitter. As the eldest son of Kronos, who was the king of the Titans, he inherited his father's dark side and often found himself engulfed in dark thoughts that he could not escape from.

He had oily, ebony hair that snaked around his shoulders and intense black eyes that would flare with purple fire. He had a muscular stature and would often be seen wearing his Helm of Darkness that was made with a mixture of the precious metals. Hades' beard looked like ashes of charcoal, cooling down to his tattered black robes which had been threaded with evil souls. Clasping his spindly fingers around his beloved sceptre, he was the living embodiment of Death. Due to living in darkness for the majority of his life, Hades had albino white skin.

Word Aware Word bank

Defensive loathsome dishonorable nefarious magnificent patient mistrustful subservient vile treacherous Supervillain lair genius intelligent horrifying terrifying grouchy aggressive knowledgeable Unlovable toxic